Continue to anticipate disruption and reconfirm flight schedules if conducting travel to or from Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas states in the coming days. Winter storm and related warnings remain in effect in portions of each state. Severe wintry conditions on 15 February prompted the temporary closure of several airports along Winter Storm Uri's projected path and the cancellation of thousands of flights. While airports in Louisiana and Texas have reopened, Jackson-Medgar Wiley Evers International Airport (JAN) and Hawkins Field Airport (HKS) in Mississippi state remain closed until at least 23.00 (times local) on 19 February. Further flight delays are likely, and airport closures may be extended throughout the duration of the storm.

WHAT WE ADVISED YOUR PEOPLE

We do not hold specific information on flight schedules. Contact the relevant airport or airline directly to reconfirm the status of flights prior to travel. In the event of cancellations, your travel agent will be able to assist with alternative arrangements.

Expect residual disruption even after airports reopen as airlines work to clear the backlog of affected flights. Arrive early at the airport or check in online to prevent your seat from being reallocated to a standby passenger.
