Do We Take Absolute Responsibility - Are We All Self-Made or are Only Successful People Self Made?

As long as we have "free will" to make choices we are ALL self-made. The ability to make choices determines where we will find ourselves in life. Victims will make choices that support their view of their life; successful people will make choices that will lead them to successful outcomes.

Our destiny depends on our responses and the subsequent choices that we make.

Happiness follows a law that is inverse to Mathematics. When you start dividing it among others, it actually multiplies. The will to achieve more is possible however it requires a larger commitment not only to ourselves but also to others.

We need to do or learn in order to feel stronger, more self-sufficient, and more self-confident, more "worthy" in our own eyes and in the eyes of others? Regardless of where we are in our life, if we don't value ourselves, no one else will either.

We will never get more of what we want, because we don't think we deserve it. If we not confident of our current abilities and skills, we won't be able to understand the path that we need to take. This is the only way to get better. We need to know what is good and right for ourselves.

All of us need external help to be completely successful. A smart person will use the positive influencers in his/her life to move ahead.

Sure, there is so much around us that brings us down and makes us hang our heads in our hands. We need to find a shift of sorts – a movement, away from pain, suffering and misery towards something more positive, more inspiring. This shift in focus paves the way for a new, more hopeful way of living.

Everything starts with a vision: we deserve a better life, for ourselves and for others around us. We are evolutionary species; wisdom and technology are available to us to elevate ourselves to that point of "sapience" that the label seems to confer to us. Humans can be better humans. Not just better cyborgs. It's not about hearing better, reaching higher, dealing with more information, or running faster. It's about being better humans. When we put it at the core of our endeavors, and we put wisdom to work to achieve that purpose, we will be in the right track to a truly "exponential r-evolution.

We are worth it. We owe it to ourselves – and the world – to become the highest and best version of ourselves that we can possibly be. It all just begins with taking absolute responsibility.
